The world has a lot of hotels, some better than others. Certain properties are 100% worth adding to your must-stay travel bucket list, whether its because they have a great location, great amenities, or a serious sense of luxury. From the Thames-adjacent Mondrian London to the iconic glass igloos of Hotel Kakslauttanen, we've compiled 15 hotels from around the globe you should consider for future trips. They're not cheap, but they're worth it, and if you start saving now, maybe you can eventually hit up all of them.

Twin Farms

Where: In the countryside town of Barnard, Vermont, a three-hour drive from Boston.

Why You Should Stay: Forget all-inclusive resorts by the beach. Twin Farms is a high-end all-inclusive experience that you'll never want to leave. Everything comes with the price tag, including picnic lunches, ice-skating, canoeing, and tennis. You can even borrow a BMW to drive around the countryside. There are various types of plush guest rooms, as well as cottages, and anything you might need, from same-day laundry to snacks, is provided free of charge. The resort is also filled with art from founder Thurston Twigg-Smith's private collection; it's essentially like staying in your own private art museum.

Coollest Amenity: There are a lot of perks at Twin Farms, but one of the coolest is the chef's table, which can be booked for a private dinner in Chef Nathan Rich's kitchen. The special meal, with wine pairings, can be for up to four guests and is only available certain days of the week. Make sure you add that to your reservation.
